

LOSS

In the Attack on Port Arthur Terrific

DESPERATE ENGAGEMENT OF TWO DAYS

Russian Capital Expects to Hear of Fall Soon.

THE JAPS PLAN OF CAMPAIGN

Another Russian Battleship Damaged By Striking a Mine—News of Far East War.

Tokyo, Aug. 24.—Admiral Kataoka reports that as the Russian battleship Sevastopol was emerging from Port Arthur she struck a mine, after which she was seen to be listed to starboard. She was towed back into the harbor.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 24.—A dispatch from Liao Yang says: "According to the latest information from Port Arthur a furious Japanese attack throughout Aug. 19 and Aug. 20 was repulsed with terrific loss. This news was received here with the greatest joy. There has been no serious fighting in this region, but there has been a small skirmish at Anshan-shan, where Japanese troops attacked a Russian outpost and were driven off with a loss of six killed. Liao Yang has experienced two days of bright weather and there is a touch of autumn in the air. The rainy season has apparently terminated."

The city is filled with sinister rumors of Port Arthur's desperate straits. The superstitious are predicting the fall of the fortress on the day of the baptism of the czarvitch, but this is easily traceable to the fact that several big Russian reverses have occurred on Russian fete days.

It is reported that a message was received from Lieutenant General Stoessel, which was sent from Port Arthur on the night of Aug. 22, by way of Chefoo, saying that a desperate assault by the Japanese had been in progress during the previous 48 hours. No confirmation of this report can be had. While the general staff does not conceal its anxiety, the best military authorities have not abandoned the hope that General Stoessel will be able to hold out. This more hopeful view is somewhat borne out by an unofficial dispatch from Liao Yang saying that in a two days' assault on Aug. 19 and Aug. 20 the attackers, like their predecessors, were beaten off with heavy loss.

Conservative critics, while they are not chary in giving the Japanese due military credit for past performances, say in plain language that the pace is too fast to last, and that every day General Stoessel holds out will render the Japanese position about Liao Yang more precarious. Even the most sanguine, however, admit the gravity of the situation from the Russian point of view, and the most serious news from the front would not be received with great surprise.

Japanese Plans Deranged.

Berlin, Aug. 24.—In a dispatch from Liao Yang, under date of Aug. 23, the correspondent of the Lokal Anzeiger says: "The indications are that the initiative is about to pass to the Russians. The Japanese plan of campaign, including the attack on Liao Yang, has apparently been deranged by the unexpectedly stubborn resistance at Port Arthur. General Kuroki's army has been withdrawn to the south of the Taite river, and only outposts are near the river. Japanese troops under General Ukashima are reported to be in the Liao river valley. It is rumored that the mikado has recalled General Nogi and has ordered Field Marshal Marquis Yamagata, chief of the general staff at Tokyo, to assume command of the besiegers at Port Arthur."

Compromise Sought.

London, Aug. 24.—The correspondent of the Times at Peking says that the Wai Wu Fu (Chinese foreign board) is trying to arrange a compromise by which Japan shall be induced to permit the Askold to remain at Shanghai until Sunday next, when the tides will permit the cruiser to cross the bar.

Crew of the Novik.

Tokyo, Aug. 24.—The Japanese believe that the crew of the Russian cruiser Novik were landed at Korsakovsk, island of Sakhalin, when the warship had been beached after the encounter with the Japanese cruisers Chitose and Tsushima, on Aug. 20. The number of the survivors is not known.

ITALIAN BOY FURNISHED TIP TO THE POLICE

And His Life Soon Paid the Forfeit.

Officers Prevented a Lynching of the Murderer in New York City This Morning.

New York, Aug. 24.—Salvatore Bossoto, an Italian of 15, son of the proprietor of the Park street restaurant, gave the police information that certain Italians were going to rob men coming to the Bossoto restaurant. The men who planned the robbery were members of the Mafia. Bossoto's life was threatened for giving the information and this morning one, Rossati, entered the restaurant and shot Bossoto through the brain. Then there was a riot and had not the police interfered it is likely Rossati would have been lynched in the street. The murderer is now safe in Elizabeth street police station.

Defeat of the Novik.

Tokyo, Aug. 24.—The Japanese protected cruiser Tsushima alone defeated the Russian cruiser Novik. The first engagement occurred Saturday, Aug. 20, and the Japanese protected cruiser Chitose finished the destruction of the Russian ship on Sunday. The details of the engagement have reached the navy department here. The Tsushima received shells through two bunkers, but the damage has been repaired.

GHASTLY FIND

Police Sereant Finds the Head of His Own Son at a Chicago Railway Crossing.

Chicago, Aug. 24.—A young man about 22 years of age was killed by a train and a patrol wagon in charge of Police Sergeant Patrick Reilly was sent to convey the remains to the morgue. The body was literally cut in pieces, and the police were forced to gather it up by bits. For some time the head could not be found, but it was finally picked up by Sergeant Reilly, who, on bringing it to the light of a lantern, found that it was the head of his own son, Patrick J. Reilly.

Frank Allee, chairman of the state central committee. Dr. Luther S. Conwell of Kent county was made temporary chairman. J. Edward Addicks was a delegate. The following ticket was nominated: Governor, Henry H. Conrad, Wilmington; lieutenant governor, I. Thomas Parker, Wilmington; representative in congress, Dr. Hiram R. Burton, Lewes; attorney general, Sylvester D. Townsend, Jr., Wilmington; state treasurer, Thomas Curry. The electoral candidates are those named by the regular Republicans at their recent convention.

Ignore the Summons.

Chicago, Aug. 24.—Postmaster General Henry C. Payne was served with a summons to appear in a justice court in this city on Aug. 26 as a witness in a case against Chauncey M. Depew. The postmaster general did not receive the summons with pleasure, and informed the constable, John Simons, that he would ignore it entirely. Last June, when Senator Depew was in Chicago attending the Republican national convention, he was sued by S. G. Brabrook of this city, who declared that he had in some manner been defrauded by a concern called the Penny Publishing company with which, he asserted, Senator Depew had been connected, in 1892.

COURT

Of Inquiry Ordered to Investigate

RECENT NEGRO LYNCHING AT STATESBORO, GA.

Governor of Southern State is Fully Aroused.

DENOUNCES ACTION OF THE MOB

And Desires That Offenders Be Brought to Speedy Justice in the State Courts.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 24.—On his return from St. Louis Governor Joseph M. Terrell held a conference with Samuel W. Harrison, adjutant general of Georgia, in which the recent Statesboro lynching was discussed. The conference terminated with the appointment of a court of inquiry to investigate the conduct of the militia from which the mob took the prisoners. After the appointment of this court Governor Terrell issued a statement condemning in strong terms the lynching of the negroes.

Governor Terrell says: "I have been greatly mortified over the crime of this mob. I take comfort in the fact that it did not represent the sentiment of this state, for its action is condemned by a large majority of the people of the state and for that matter of Statesboro and Dalton county, the scene of the crime. No defense can, and no apology should be made for this action of the mob. I regret exceedingly the military did not preserve the peace. They were sent there to see that the law was enforced and that peace was preserved at all hazards."

In accordance with the report and recommendation of the adjutant general, I have ordered a court of inquiry, composed of fair, conservative and competent officers, to investigate the action and conduct of the military on that occasion. I shall request the civil authorities, the court so organized, to do its utmost to bring the offenders against its dignity and the majesty of the law to speedy and swift justice."

STATE ACTS

Seeks to Ferret Out the St. Marys Dynamiters—A Rigid Investigation Is Ordered.

Columbus, O., Aug. 24.—Auditor of State Walter D. Gilbert has instructed Chief Engineer Charles Perkins of the state board of public works to spare no expense in ferreting out the miscreants who attempted to cause widespread disaster by dynamiting the outer bulkhead of the Grand reservoir at St. Marys. Superintendent Meacham of the reservoir was here in consultation with Colonel Perkins.

It is suspected that some ignorant farmers were at the bottom of the dastardly attempt. There are 31,000 acres of water, and had the inner bulkhead been destroyed there would have been tremendous loss of life and property. The great majority of farmers in the vicinity would no more think of causing such a flood than they would of committing suicide, according to Superintendent Meacham. But it is said that some who have small tracts of land below the reservoir object to the fact that this artificial body of water interferes with the drainage by tilting of their low-lying lands.

No Clew to Dynamiters.

St. Marys, O., Aug. 24.—There is no clew to the perpetrators of the dynamite outrage at St. Marys reservoir. Had the attempt been successful to blow up the bulkhead of the reservoir and drain the lake, there would have been great loss of life and property. Although the damages are limited mostly to broken windows in this city, the wrecking of one house near the bulkhead and one state boat and the partial breaking of the bank, there is great excitement here because it is feared that the attempt may be repeated.

Trouble in Mindanao.

Manila, Aug. 24.—The forces under Datto Ali, on the island of Mindanao, adopted guerrilla tactics in fighting United States soldiers. To counteract this departure Major General Leonard Wood organized four crack fighting companies of 100 men each, composed of infantry and cavalry, which are to operate independently and conduct a vigorous campaign for the capture or destruction of the enemy.

ALL FACTIONS IN HARNESS FOR PARKER

Candidate Hears and Approves Campaign Plans

Democratic Editors From All Parts of Country to Meet and Call on Judge Parker.

Esopus, N. Y., Aug. 24.—Plans for the national campaign were laid before Judge Parker yesterday by Delancey Nicholl, of New York vice chairman of the Democratic National committee, who called at Rosemount by invitation. Judge Parker approved everything that has been done and all that the committee has in contemplation. He was enthusiastic over the campaign work. The report carried to Rosemount by Mr. Nicholl indicated the close of the Murphy-McCarren feud in Greater New York. He said that the appointment of Victor J. Dowling as a member of the State executive committee and the head of a bureau of organization which will have charge of the city campaign, as satisfactory to Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany hall, who will do his utmost for the success of the National ticket.

Four members of a special committee of seven appointed by the Reform club of New York to call upon Judge Parker, called at Rosemount and extended the candidate an invitation to speak under the club's auspices in case he decided to make speeches during the campaign. Judge Parker told his visitors that he is yet undecided as to what he will do, but that later he may be glad to avail himself of the club's invitation.

DEMOCRATS

At National and State Headquarters Are Busy—Murphy and McCarren Settle Differences.

New York, Aug. 24.—There was great activity at both the national and state headquarters of the Democrats in this city, due to the visits of many men interested in the campaign and of others who are seeking employment with the committees. National Chairman Taggart received a number of visitors, among them David B. Hill, who had been in constant conference with the state leaders at the Hoffman House. August Belmont also had a busy day, as he was conferring with national, state and city leaders most of the time. He called on Mr. Hill at the state headquarters. Considerable satisfaction is expressed among Democrats over the settlement of the differences between Leader Murphy of Tammany Hall and Senator McCarren of the state executive committee, so far as relate to the present campaign.

Democratic Editors Meeting.

New York, Aug. 24.—A meeting of all the Democratic editors of the United States in this city, in September, has been decided on by the Democratic National Committee, and the plans are now being perfected. It is a part of the plan that the editors shall go to Esopus and spend a portion of the day at Judge Parker's home. They will be entertained in this city at a banquet and it is probable that several important speeches will be delivered.

It is arranged that the editors should meet in New York September 7 and on the 8th they will go to Esopus by steamer. It is expected that there will be a national organization formed while they are here.

FINANCIAL

And Real Estate Circles Agitated By Action Against Thos. E. Waggaman.

Washington, Aug. 24.—A sensation was caused in financial and real estate circles in this city when it became known that a petition in bankruptcy had been filed by three of the leading national banks of the city against Thomas E. Waggaman, a prominent real estate and insurance agent of this city, and the treasurer of the Catholic university. The petition at the same time seeks to dissolve a deed of trust recorded Monday in Mr. Waggaman's property for an amount of approximately $575,000 in favor of the Catholic university, on the ground that he is void as being an insolvent debtor to creditors. The petitioners held over due of Mr. Waggaman's debt by the three banks, which $575,000 is due the Metropolitan bank.

They are corporations that have failed to pay the Willis capital stock tax and are subject to a penalty of $500 and $100 per day. The names of the corporations are withheld for the present.

STRIKER SHOT

Another Tragedy in the Stockyards. Riot—Victim Dead—More Trouble at Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 24.—Another shooting affray that probably will cost a life marked the progress of the stockyards strike, and in addition the second killing of the long struggle was recorded in the death of one of the men who was wounded in the train riot of last Saturday evening. The man who was shot, and whose life is despaired of, is Albert Grohn, a striking cattle butcher. He was wounded in the stomach, and the man who fired on him is said to have been Charles Morrell, a nonunion fireman employed at the Nelson Morris power house. Morrell escaped. The man who died as a result of the train riot was Dennis Ryan.

Chicago, Aug. 24.—Judge Brentano this morning granted the application of the packers for an injunction restraining the city from enforcing its order for the evacuation of a building in the stockyards used as sleeping quarters for the strike-breakers. He said that the injunction was granted in the interests of peace, business and good order. If the men were required to leave the stockyards every night, riots would result. It was a matter of public expediency, said he.

Japanese Strike-Breakers.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 24.—With the arrival of a number of strike-breakers in the packing house district came 30 Japanese from the smelting and manufacturing districts of Colorado. They were taken into the plant of the Omaha Packing company. The packers claim to have had offers of 500 more Japanese workmen, and it is believed they have accepted them. It is known that at least some other Japanese will soon follow the first in stalling.

President Wagner announced that the new warden would not be chosen at this meeting but that Deputy Warden Wood would be allowed to manage the prison at least until the September meeting. The first plans were to elect a warden at once. The change indicates that the governor and the board have been unable to as yet to agree upon a man.

Chfoo, Aug. 24.—A junk which left Laos promontory on the night of Aug. 21 has just arrived here. They have driven the Russians from the parade grounds, which lie about two miles north of the harbor. They have captured two forts at Chaohanko, which is within the eastern forts, and they have advanced to a point near Chaohanko. This news confirms information received here previously and which the local Japanese were not inclined to believe.

It is stated that the bill for the regulation of wireless telegraphy, which the Postmaster General is to submit to the next Parliament, aims at making wireless telegraphy a Government monopoly throughout the United Kingdom.

WANTED TO DIE

Chicago, Aug. 24.—Among six suicides or attempted suicides, reported to the police, the methods adopted by Frank Foley, were the most unusual. Determined to die, yet shrinking from self destruction, Foley obtained employment in the stockyards, then drove through the strike district telling all whom he saw that he was a strike-breaker. His hopes that he would be attacked by rioters and killed, was not realized. He quit his job and shot himself, but will recover. He quarreled with his wife.

SORES AND ULCERS SHOW A BAD CONDITION OF THE BLOOD

When the blood is in bad condition a bruise, cut, scratch, or any slight injury to the flesh, is apt to become an ugly-looking sore or ulcer. Sometimes a boil, blister or pimple is the beginning of a large eating ulcer or open, discharging sore. Often the blood is naturally bad, and is that way from birth, and such people suffer with various kinds of sores from infancy through old age. The blood may become so weak and watery from the effects of malarial sickness, debility or some old chronic trouble, that the impurities break out in bad sores on the lower extremities or other part of the body. There is always some morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood that keeps the sore discharging, and must be gotten out before it will heal. Washes and salves, while cleansing, soothing and helpful, will not do it, because they do not reach the poisoned blood; S. S. S. cleanses and purifies the diseased blood, and when this is accomplished the place heals. Where the health has been impaired it restores strength and vigor to the system, improves the appetite and digestion, and tones up the nerves. Purifying the blood is the surest way to get rid of an old sore or ulcer. Medical advice is free.

A common boil appeared on the calf of my right leg. I used the simple home remedies but the place refused to heal. The physician I consulted did me no good. My leg was a solid core from calf to ankle, and I then began S. S. S. and I improved rapidly, but an attack of typhoid fever settled in the original sore, causing a backset. I began it again as soon as I was over the fever, and was completely and permanently cured.

MRS. K. A. DUFFY, 214 Washington St. New Castle, Pa.

Roosevelt's Opinion of Farmers and Workmen.

There was a time when Roosevelt never dreamed of being a candidate for President. At that period he wrote a book entitled, "Ranch Life and Hunting Trail." On pages 9 and 10 of that book may be found his opinion of farmers and workmen. He gives it in a manner which is particularly insulting. He says:

Peril and hardship and years of long toil broken by weeks of brutal dissipation draw haggard lines across their (the cow-boys' and rough riders') eager faces, but never dim their reckless eyes nor break their bearing of self-confidence. When drunk on the villainous whisky of the frontier towns they cut mad antics, ride their horses into the saloons, firing their pistols right and left, from boisterous light-heartedness, rather than from any viciousness, and indulging too often in deadly shooting affrays, brought on either by the accidental contact of the moment or on account of some long-standing grudge, or perhaps because of bad blood between the ranches or localities. But except while on such sprees they are quiet, rather self-contained men, perfectly frank and simple, and on their own ground treat a stranger with the most whole-souled hospitality, doing all in their power for him and scorning to take any reward in return. Although prompt to resent an injury, they are not at all apt to be rude to outsiders treating them with what can almost be called a grave courtesy. They are much better fellows and pleasanter companions than small farmers or agricultural laborers; nor are the mechanics and workmen of a great city to be mentioned in the same breath.

It has never been announced that Mr. Roosevelt has changed his mind on this subject. Moreover he is known to have expressed his opinion of farmers on another occasion in a still more emphatic manner.

In a speech made by him in New York in October, 1896, at a "sound-money" meeting in the Wool Exchange, reported in the New York Journal October 28, 1896, Mr. Roosevelt said:

Mr. Bryan and his adherents have appealed to the basest set in the land, the farmers.

In a speech in Congress the Hon. Claude Kitchin quoted this contemptible allusion to the farmer by Roosevelt, and said:

"Mr. Chairman, search the world over, through history from the beginning, and you will look in vain to find another who has in any way maligned the farmer of his own country. It is a marvel that any party should offer as a candidate for the Presidency, a man who has so viciously traduced the character of the best type of our citizenship, the American farmer."

"In referring to a committee of the New York legislature, before which questions affecting the interest of labor came, and to a delegation of labor men who appeared before it, he describes them in his American Ideals, Volume I page 165, as 'The rogues' gallery,' and one of the labor men who spoke as 'a sleek, oily little fellow, with a black mustache, who had never done a stroke of work in his life.' And another as 'a fellow-professional of another type—a great, burly man who would speak of the Wrongs (with a capital W) of Labor (with a capital L) and bellow as if he had been a bull of Bashan.'"

"No workman should ever again object to government by injunction after reading the following from Mr. Roosevelt's American Ideals (Vol. II, p. 18):"

"The men who object to what they style 'government by injunction' are, as regards the essential principles of government, in hearty sympathy with their remote skin-clad ancestors who lived in caves, fought one another with stone-headed axes, and ate the mammoth and wooly rhinoceros."

"They are interesting as representing a geological survival, but they are dangerous whenever there is the least chance of their making the principles of this ages-buried past living factors in our present life."

"They are not in sympathy with men of good minds and sound civic morality."

There is no man in public life today of either political party, who has expressed such contempt for workmen as the foregoing from the pen of Theodore Roosevelt. And yet he wants the votes of these same workmen in this fall.

Spencer Carrington, M. P., who is eighty-six years old, was recently given a handsome silver goblet by the prime minister, in commemoration of his attendance throughout an all-night sitting of the House of Commons. And yet some people pretend to believe that the vigorous and robust Henry G. Davis is too old to act as vice president, although all-night sessions of the United States senate are entirely done away with.

The New Philadelphia Democrat and Times remarks: "There may be some local politicians who may imagine they can 'pull Judge Smyser's leg' by claiming to him that they will run him ahead in Tuscarawas county. But if the Judge is as wary as he is used to be, he will not accede to their wishes. He'll keep the 'dough' in his pocket."

A $5,000 even bet has been made in New York that Judge Parker will carry that State. Mr. F. H. Brooks who made the wager told the New York World that he had $19,000 more to bet on the same terms.

OLD-FASHIONED DEMOCRACY

(Enquirer.)

The tariff issue, the money question and the contentions growing out of the war with Spain and the acquisition of the Philippine Islands have occupied the field of politics for several years, to at least partial exclusion of principles to which there ought to be constant attention. Those who treasure the old-fashioned tenets of Democracy—such as simplicity and economy in government, the subordination of the military to the civil power, and the restriction of the Federal establishment to its proper sphere—and have yearned for a fight on these ideas, are likely to discover the day breaking in Judge Parker's speech of acceptance, from which the following is a quotation:

The principles of Democracy are grounded in eternal truth. As formulated by the father of Democracy they are not for a day, but for all time, and are as applicable in this hour as when he proclaimed them in his first inaugural address, which has become a classic. The necessity of putting them into practice is as pressing now as it was then. To once more make them the basis of our political action is the pleasant but arduous task assigned you by the Democracy of the land.

An arduous task indeed, but a task which is nevertheless one to be enthusiastically undertaken. The old-fashioned Democrat believes that centralization has made such rapid and insidious progress that it is necessary to make a vigorous assertion of first principles to regain lost ground. He believes that the power and expense of the Federal establishment have grown far out of proportion with the growth of the country; that the United States Courts, which in other days were frequently looked upon as "the sappers and miners of constitutional liberty," have been dangerously multiplied, that jurisdiction belonging exclusively to the states has been absorbed by the United States; that the number of United States offices has been unnecessarily increased, and that there has been extraordinary extravagance in the erection of buildings to house them; that an offensive office-holding class system has been fostered in imitation of the Civil Service prevailing under monarchical forms; that government has been interpreted to be an institution that must be "doing something" all the time, even to the extent of daring other people to fight, when there is nothing to fight about, and not a remote cause for belligerency in the future; that the old idea that a large standing army was a menace to foundation principles has been supplanted by the erection of large military concerns, easily capable of being increased to colossal numbers, with an expensive transport system, an elaborate hospital scheme, and a fearful addition to the serried ranks of graves in the National Cemeteries; that money is poured out like water in the administration of public affairs, and vast frauds restrained only when a watchful minority threatens to "turn the rascals out;" and that the reckless spirit which is begotten of long lease of power is running riot.

These are a few of the counts in the indictment that the old-fashioned Democrat would draw up. If he won the election in November, and convicted the maladministrators, his work would be only begun. Indeed, he would have only obtained a license to manufacture the beams with which to sweep out the extravagant and conscienceless incumbents. He would find that the heretics, as he would call them, had mapped out extensive and expensive works that he would be obliged to carry to a conclusion. There would be the Philippine conquest, already enormously costly, presenting a tremendous problem, now scarcely past its incipient stages. There would be the debating habit in our highest tribunal about how far apart the flag and the constitution must travel, which has been regarded in some quarters as a said sign of judicial decadence brought on by our spectacular advent as a "world Power." There would be the extensive public building work already laid out and begun in Washington, entailing continuing appropriations that a whole generation will not see the end of. Believing the present tariff to be radically wrong, this disciple of Jefferson, spoken of here as a sort of abstract personage, would find a commercial and manufacturing system built up on it that might not be demolished at a single session of Congress, but that would require years of patient statesmanship to bring to a conservative plane. He would have on his hands the obstinate fellows who believe that prosperity was born of the wisdom of William McKinley and his associates, and that nothing but the godlike efforts of Theodore Roosevelt and George Cortelyou, and such like persons, can maintain it. He would find the Republicans in possession of the Panama Canal enterprise and the Federal offices, and other happy means of raising money for their political needs and would have to deal with the "business man" who doesn't want a change of any sort while he is making money—one of the fellows, who wouldn't have the constitution stand between him and 10 per cent profit on a consignment of scrap-iron or rags.

Rally, this work of renegeulating first principles ought to have been commenced long ago. The expediencies of the present have a long start, and have made it necessary to keep up the reckless outlay for a good while. But the old-fashioned Democrat, ever faithful and never despairing, is ready for the long fight. He is confident it will have to come some time. He has grave apprehensions as to the perpetuity of the republic if there is further lassitude. He is ready for the fray in this year of grace, 1904.

WILLIS FULTON

WRITES ON ONE PHASE OF THE POLITICAL SITUATION

In the West, as He Has Gathered It, From Contact With the Western Stockmen.

Mr. Willis N. Fulton, of this county, who is now in Colorado, and who is engaged on the staff of The Denver Record-Stockman, the official livestock and market paper of the West, sends The Advocate the following article on one phase of the political situation in the West. Mr. Fulton comes in close contact with the Western stockmen and writes with authority. He says:

"As the active political campaign approaches and the questions at issue are beginning to be more thoroughly discussed, western politicians are beginning to realize that there is one clause of the Democratic platform adopted at St. Louis, that is appealing to western snippers generally and particularly to western stockmen. This clause reads as follows:

"We demand an enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission, to the end that the traveling public and shippers of this country may have prompt and adequate relief from the abuses they are subjected to in the matter of transportation."

"This plank was inserted at the request of the organized cattlemen of the West, represented by W. A. Harris, of Kansas, and Judge S. H. Cowan, of Texas, the latter attorney for the Cattle Growers Interstate Executive committee, an organization of stockmen, representing every state and territory of the West.

"As it is now the interstate commerce commission may say what in their opinion is a reasonable rate and may say that an existing rate is too high, but they have no power to enforce such decree and the shipper effected must go into the courts in order to get the rate enforced. This, as anyone who has had litigation with the railroads knows, incurs expense and loss of time to the shipper to such an extent that he is rarely willing to undertake it.

"That the state has the power and the right under the constitution to control and regulate these rates of the railroads, who are regarded as common carriers and not as private corporations, has been held repeatedly by the supreme court of the United States, and what the shippers now wants is that his interests will be looked after by a disinterested body and that the fixing of rates shall not be left entirely to the railroads.

"When competition existed among the railroads the shipper had a fair chance of an equitable rate but with the elimination of competition and the combination of railroads has come an increase in rates (especially on live stock in the West) until now rates are higher on livestock than they have been in the last fifteen years. In some cases these rates may not be too high, but if such is the case the railroads can lose nothing by having them passed upon by this commission, but in many cases there is no doubt but what they are higher than conditions justify and it is no more than right that the shippers should have some remedy.

"Heretofore all bills destined to give the commission the power asked for have died a natural death in the house committee, and on account of the railroad interests in the said committee have never been reported from it. It is now the intention of the Cattle Growers Executive committee through its secretary, Fred P. Johnson, of Denver, Colo., to scatter broadcast over the country, literature giving the exact facts in the case and the stockmen expect to support for congress this fall, only those men who are known to be in favor of the proposed bill.

"It is predicted that the plank of the Democratic platform, above referred to, will draw many votes to the party as the cattlemen went before the Republican committee on platform at Chicago, and endeavored to have the same plank inserted, but failed."

Mr. W. T. Soliday has purchased the coal business formerly conducted by Mr. O. P. Connor at No. 82 South Fifth street. Mr. Soliday will continue the business at the same place where he will continue to handle Bristol coal. All orders promptly filled. Old phone. 18d6tsw2t

ANOTHER WONDER OF SCIENCE.

Biology has Proved that Dandruff is Caused by a Germ.

Science is doing wonders these days in medicine as well as in mechanics. Since Adam lived, the human race has been troubled with dandruff, for which no hair preparation has heretofore proved a successful cure until Newbro's Herpicide was put on the market. It is a scientific preparation that kills the germ that makes dandruff or scurf by digging into the scalp to get at the root of the hair, where it seeps the vitality; causing itching scalp, falling hair, and finally baldness. Without dandruff hair must grow luxuriantly. It is the only destroyer of dandruff. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

DISCOVERY

OFFERS CLUE TO POSTOFFICE ROBBERY LAST WINTER.

S. E. Hagy, While Clearing a Shed at Etna, Found Moneyorders and Sifted In a Manger.

S. E. Hagy, a prominent resident of Etna, Licking county, made a discovery Monday evening which, in his opinion, offers a clue to the robbery of the postoffice at Baltimore, Ohio, last February.

While cleaning a shed in the rear of his premises, Mr. Hagy found the cash drawer of a safe hidden beneath a manger. In this drawer were about four hundred blank postoffice money orders, several tax receipts and two photographs.

There was also a postal money order, No. 167,448, issued by the postoffice at Providence, R. I., to Benjamin and Company for $46. The order is dated February 23, 1934.

Mr. Hagy found a mysterious horse and buggy in his shed early one morning last February. As the postoffice at Baltimore was robbed the night before, he now thinks the rig was stolen by the men who committed the burglary and that the robbers hid a portion of their plunder in his shed.

Of Dunbaud Family, Near Lock, an Enjoyable Affair—Next Meeting Near Jonstown.

Lock, O., Aug. 24.—One of the most delightful events of the season was the sixth annual reunion of the Dunbaud family, held at the pleasant country home of Mr. and Mrs. Orlando Dunbaud, near Lock, Thursday, Aug. 18, 1934, when more than 100 relatives and near friends gathered at an early hour to enjoy the pleasures of handshakings, social chats and the various sports and jollities of the day.

The dinner, which was an elaborate affair, was spread upon the large, beautiful lawn over which was erected a large canopy which afforded a beautiful outdoor parlor for the afternoon's program, which consisted of the invocation by the Rev. Joseph Long, of Centerburg, and recitations by the little Misses Gertrude Hall, Letha Laramore, Helen Hall and Bert Dixon. Miss Audrey Pratt, of Johnstown, also favored with a recitation. The Robertson and Buxton cousins sang a lively song while little three-year-old Inez Dunbaud sang, "In the Good, Old Summer Time," to the delight of all. A number of songs were sung by the older members of the gathering.

The Rev. Mr. Long made a fine address, perfectly fitting to the occasion. Short speeches were made by the Messrs. J. B. Hall and aces Williams of Homer; Mr. Shoemaker, of Columbus, and Mrs. Taylor of Indiana.

Children's School Shoes

It is natural for some children to come here for shoes as it is for them to go to school. But we are after new friends. Do you know that one of the worst things you can do to the children is to make them wear ill-fitting, poorly-made shoes? Shoes that pinch, leather that's not properly tanned?

We put in medium-weight leather in the uppers of our Children's School Shoes, and yet it must be soft—don't let anybody tell you that heavy leather can't be made soft.

We put nothing but oak-tanned sole-leather under these uppers—oak leather is the strongest sole leather made, and it's pliable besides.

All this costs money, but what extra we put into our shoes we get out again by selling so many. You can't find better School Shoes than ours, if you try.

"HOW TO TEACH LANGUAGE," IS MR. CALL'S SUBJECT.

Additional Registration of Teachers—Lecture Thursday Night—The Art of Teaching.

After singing by the quartette, the Wednesday morning session was opened by a devotional exercise, conducted by Mr. R. O. Austin of Newark.

Instead of taking up new work, Mr. Call, the first speaker, announced that by request, he had decided to conclude Tuesday afternoon's subject, "How to Teach Language." After a brief review of the portion of his lecture already considered, he proceeded with further elucidation of this train of thought. Grammar, he said, is a much simpler matter than is usually considered, but is not to be eliminated from the public school curriculum.

Impression is highly effective only in so far as it leads to expression. Leading from the general to the particular, Mr. Call asked, "What composition exercises may profitably be employed in the public school?" To this question a number of answers were proposed:

1. Oral or written reproduction of reading lessons.
2. Reproduction of what has been read or told to the pupils or read suggested as helpful in attaining facility by them.
3. Reproduction of lessons in natural history or geography.
4. Talks on manners and morals.
5. Letter writings on practical subjects.

Dictation, exercises, paraphrasing, spelling lessons, instruction in use of apostrophe, hyphen, etc., are also found useful. An excellent disciplinary thing is frequent writing of verse, and oral expounding of some familiar theme. A practical illustration of a course of work in the first grade was shown to apply with some modification, to older grades. The great difficulty from first grade up is the reading of words, and not thought. This should be overcome in the beginning. A number of excellent devices were suggested as helpful in attaining facility in reading and writing.

A change from the regular outlined program was made Wednesday morning by Mr. Miller, who substituted his lecture on "The Great Canals of the World," for that on "Lessons from the World's Fair." A feature of special interest in connection with the subject of canals was the splendid illustration afforded by the new Panama canal model, which has recently become the property of the Newark schools.

The Onio Canal, passing through Licking county, furnished a starting point for the morning's talk. A brief mention of the various canals known in history, was coupled with statistical information as to their structure, and the few inventions which have tended to their improvement. The canals of the ancient Chinese; the wonderful "Soo" canal; the Erie canal, invaluable in the development of the country through which it passed; the Miami, the Ohio, the Hocking canals, stepping stones to Ohio power; the Wabash and Erie, in Indiana, and the Chicago river drainage canal with its own peculiar mission of subverting the course of that river.

Taking up the description of the Panama canal, Mr. Miller referred to the model before him, paying a deserved tribute to those through whom such an invaluable addition has been made to the Newark school property. With such an illustration the description became a matter of simplicity and vivid interest.

Allied with the "Soo" and the Panama canals in greatness is the Suez canal. All have stories of romantic interest connected with their construction. The plan of the last named was first proposed by a young Frenchman, whose proposition was rejected successively by England, France, Spain and Switzerland. German scholars were the first to prove and accept the truth of his statements. Finally, a company was organized to build the canal—not the first, according to Wendell Phillips, who holds that such a canal, though long destroyed, did anciently exist.

The beginning of the attempt was attended with countless difficulties. A stock company was formed, and work begun, but unsuccessful. Through the cleverness of Disraeli, England, finally, through aid given to Khedive, made possible the construction of the waterway, of which she ultimately gained possession.

Plans similar to these were made for the Panama canal, though in the beginning called the Nicaragua canal, but through unfortunate chain of circumstances, the attempt ended under a cloud of disgrace. Later plans, under the different name and management, have given bright prospects of the not far distant completion of what has certainly proved itself the world's most needed waterway.

A very few minutes before the end of Mr. Miller's talk was devoted to a short talk on the subject of the World's Fair, which, though greatly abridged, was very interesting and attentively heard.

The last forty minutes were given to Prof. Denney, who has constantly grown in interest to his hearers. Prof. Denney is a master in the subject matter with which he is dealing, and every address, whatever the phase of the subject considered, teems with thought and with earnest, helpful suggestion.

The first faculty considered, toward the gaining of language mastery, was imitation. This is strongly developed from the very beginning of the "kindergarten period"; when he attains the "primary period" his fund of knowledge is the gift of others, gained by him through this imitative faculty. The primary period introduces into his work objects, as the best test of experience and exercise of his power in use of language. In actual handling of objects, he learns use of prepositions, or relative words, he also gains a knowledge of idiomatic expressions through communication with the teacher. Do not be afraid of complex sentences; do fear inaccuracy. The average child unconsciously uses good English. Many primary text books do not. The first desire to be gained from the object lesson is precision; next is fluency and discursiveness. Do not misunderstand the desire for a large vocabulary; give words freely, though only as fast as they can be adapted to need.

The story is a valuable instrument in the acquisition of language power. The story embodies idioms which should be persistently taught the child. The first class includes phrases introduced by "before," "after," "when"; the second, the participial construction. The word "and" has been worked to death; put it to bed and let it sleep for weeks.

In conclusion, a carefully expressed resume of his principal thoughts strengthened the value of Mr. Denney's discourse, which throughout was especially helpful for its intensely practical nature.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Prof. Denney opened the afternoon session with a discussion of the teaching, or interpretation, of poetry. Such interpretation, he began, is usually considered more difficult than prose reading, because its logic is less obvious. Begin your study by asking the previously proposed fundamental questions, "what" and "how." Gain a thorough knowledge of the poem's environment. A slight attention to geography and local custom will often give wonderful enlightenment in your reading. A striking illustration was given by the speaker's partial interpretation of the twenty-third Psalm, and of Oliver Wendell Holmes' "The Last Leaf," as well as by a reading from Browning, leading to an examination into Browning's philosophy of life.

Such preliminary researches serve for two purposes: (1) to strengthen the intellectual understanding, or to develop the proper mood for appreciation. Further study of a piece of poetry may employ analysis. In every case we find: (1) the surface meaning, and (2) a deeper significance.

An illustrative analysis of Lovell's "Sonnet in the Street" gives us four distinct divisions of thought: (1) The situation as the poet sees it; (2) The causes of this situation; (3) Results of the situation; (4) The poet's reflection.

Finally, the interest in any piece of literature may be enhanced by asking the question, "What kind of a man entertained this thought?" In all, we have three stages of procedure which may be profitably adopted in our literary research: (1) For preliminary information; (2) Examination of structure; (3) consideration of biographical hints.

Several matters of business were to be considered Tuesday afternoon, and were taken up at the conclusion of Mr. Denney's lecture. First was the election of an O. T. R. C. secretary, the unanimous choice being Mr. Harvey Nichols. In accepting the work for the coming year, Mr. Nichols urged that the teachers assist him by taking up the work of the reading circle. Mr. Miller, Mr. Emswiler and Mr. Austin spoke briefly in favor of immediately reorganizing circles through the county, and appointing township secretaries.

The president also announced that, owing to provisions of the new code, a revision of the constitution would be necessary, and appointed a committee for this purpose, to report at the first quarterly association. The committee consisted of Miss Hoover, Messrs. Behout, Nichols, Housholder, and Austin.

Mr. Miller's address was based on the subject "The Field of Honor," dealing with "great duels of history"—this subject being selected because, in the speaker's opinion, so-called "affairs of honor" have played a marked part in history, from the early days of civilization. Our modern duel has arisen from the ancient vendetta. Our best understanding of this significant word connects itself with the feud of the Kentucky mountaineers.

The duel has had its "greatest harvest in France, where four hundred people lost their lives in the duello under Louis XIV. In Italy and Germany duels scars are counted marks of honor.

The word duel signifies a contest between two, its original derivation being from the same root as the Latin bellum. The first American duel was fought in 1620; the next not until 1728. In 1820 was fought the first of a series of famous duels of the Nineteenth century—that between Commodore Decatur and Barron. At this point Mr. Miller made a slight digression in order to explain the code and customs of duelling. Especial interest was aroused by the exhibition of old and modern French duelling pistols.

In 1826 was fought the well known duel between Henry Clay and John Randolph, whose happy termination was very different from that of most duels.

In 1838, the attention of Congress was drawn to the duel between Cilley and Graves, when the former, through a treacherous conspiracy, lost his life. The immediate result was the passing of stringent anti-duelling laws.

Despite these laws, duelling continued. In 1859, on California soil, was fought the last of these famous duels—sectional political feeling culminating in a meeting between United States Senator D. C. Broderick and Hon. D. C. Terry. At their first and second meetings both principals were arrested by the police. At the third, before the final command to fire, Terry sent a fatal bullet into the body of Mr. Broderick.

One duel, preceding all these, is more famous than any—that of 1804, between Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton. The story of this contest was taken up with much more detail, a minute account of the attendant circumstances being given. The fatal end of the duel, and the tragedy of Burr's after life were dwelt upon with much feeling. The whole address was derivative of great pleasure to the audience, introducing fresh thoughts upon a subject which is always vested with new interest to the student of American history.

The last half hour of the afternoon was devoted to Mr. Call's lecture, "How to Teach Language." Language he regarded as including reading, writing, spelling, grammar and literature. The great end of language work, oral, written or silent is the acquisition of thought and feeling; a secondary aim is the mastery of forms. There must be constant assisting correlation between these two ends. Form includes neatness, punctuation, etc., and can be mastered most effectively by constant practice.

In the second half of the fifth year of school life should be a technical and logical study of the English sentence. Such study does not involve the student in so many grammatical difficulties as many imagine. In fact, the principles of English grammar may be summed up under seven headings: (1) sentence; (2) parts of speech and their relations; (3) subject, predicate and modifiers; (4) plurals and possessives; (5) declension of pronouns; (6) comparison of adjectives and adverbs; (7) study of principal parts of verbs and auxiliaries.

Owing to lack of time, Mr. Call was obliged to greatly abridge the latter part of his talk, dwelling very briefly on suggestions of aids in composition and illustrative lessons. At 3:30 he left his subject practically unfinished, in order that the Institute might hold to its regular rule of adjourning at that hour.

TEACHING

THE SCIENCE OF PEDAGOGY HAS MADE GREAT PROGRESS

Yet Much More Remains to Be Done to Produce Best Results—A Few Observations.

The science of Pedagogy has made great progress during the last few decades; nevertheless it would not be impertinent to ask whether the teachers in our public schools or even the professors in our colleges and universities have yet learned to appreciate the beauty and excellence of the drawing out process—the question might even be raised whether they have more than touched the borders of this rich and fertile field.

It may at least be asserted that much of the time and attention that are given to the discussion of "methods" and "systems" of instruction might be more profitably employed in studying the art of stimulating the faculties of pupils and bringing them into the most profitable exercise.

Everybody, perhaps, knows that the way to teach a baby to walk is to arouse its interest and ambition in such a manner that it will exercise its feet and legs and learn to balance its body on the floor—should not the same principle apply in all phases and processes of education?

In other words, should not boys and girls of all ages be encouraged not only to learn the lessons prescribed for them, but to search out facts and the relation of facts for themselves? Should they not only be taught to think for themselves, but to express their thoughts in their own terms and language?

To this end, we believe that the teacher should diligently search out the individual faculties of his or her pupils in order to connect each lesson or exercise with what they already know as well as to make it the basis of new activities and acquisitions.

Houses are not built by suspending stone or brick or pieces of wood in the air, but by laying brick on brick, stone on stone (not forgetting to cement them with mortar), and by joining wood to wood. Should not the psychological house be built the same way?—Can it be built in any other way?

Herbert Spencer says concerning Prof. Tyndall and his methods of instruction: "He was a good expositor, and a good expositor implies much constructive imagination. A pre-requisite is a clear knowledge of the mental states of those who are to be taught, and a further pre-requisite is the imagining of methods by which beginning with conceptions which children already have there may be built up in their minds conceptions which they do not have."

Not every teacher can be expected to know as much as Professor Tyndall or to understand the art of teaching as well as he did, but all teachers and their pupils are subject to the same psychological laws to which he and his pupils were subject.

Let no one, however, condemn the prescribing of definite lessons and requiring them to be faithfully studied from day to day, for "drill" is a feature of educational work not to be neglected or despised; but, on the other hand, every recitation or other school exercise should be a direct means of awakening the faculties of pupils and arousing their powers of expression.

Heaven pity the teacher who is ONLY a faithful and thorough drill-master!

Good teaching is infinitely more than the following of routine or the communication of facts; it is a play between the souls of teacher and pupils after the manner of an electric current. No one can teach children well who does not know how to establish such a current of thought and feeling between himself and them, and who does not desire to learn from them as well as to give instruction to them.

The teacher who merely "hears" a recitation for the purpose of "grading" his pupils and does not seek to stimulate their faculties with questions and suggestions knows not the beauty and glory of his office. Such a teacher may secure a limited measure of respect from his pupils but they can never give him the affection and honor which they must needs extend to the teacher who awakens their powers of mind and gives them the thrill of satisfaction which comes from conscious progress and achievement.

How great is the reward of the teacher who carries his art to the degree of perfection we have indicated. Not only will the prescribed lessons be studied with increased interest and enthusiasm, and the daily recitations become more "perfect," but the teacher's own soul will grow larger and nobler day by day, and he will be greeted with constant surprises as the minds of his pupils brighten and unfold before his eyes.

This process will make dull children bright, and bright children brighter still—could any teacher desire a richer reward than this?

The path we have pointed out is high up the slopes of the mountain, and can not be reached without great labor and the most earnest aspiration; but it is strewn with the choicest fruits and flowers; and like the path of the just, it grows brighter and brighter unto perfect day.

"Then Elisha said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins and take my staff in thine hand and go thy way, and lay my staff on the face of the child."

"And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice nor hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him and told him, saying, The child is not awakened."

"And when Elisha was come into the house, behold the child was dead and laid upon his bed."

"He went in therefore and shut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the Lord."

"And he went up and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm."

"Then he returned, and walked in the house to and fro, and went up and stretched himself upon him; and the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE buxom landlady of the Angel remembered Frances and her former visits to the inn, so she took charge of the girl in the most motherly way, fussing over her and seeing to her comfort.

It was late when Armstrong returned from the stables, for old John's pack horse showed signs of distress from traveling between seventy and eighty miles that day, and as the slowest horse in the party sets the pace, the animal had to be seen to and cared for.

After his bounteous supper the young man strolled about the rambling inn and to his surprise came upon a lonely figure in a dim alcove.

"Dear lass!" he cried, "you should have been at your rest long ago. This will never do." But he sat down beside her. The place was narrow and very cosy, as if the oriel window recess had been constructed for two lovers.

"I am not tired," she said, "and have much to think of, so I knew I could not sleep."

"Oh, it can be done. They say Cromwell has the power of dropping to sleep the instant he gets half an hour to himself. He has plenty to think of, and yet he must be able to guide his thoughts or abolish them for the moment, or he could not do that. Do you like Cromwell?"

"I do not," she said.

"You surprise me. I thought you were a partisan of his. You remember what I said when we were approaching this inn?"

"You said many things."

"Aye. But I said one in particular that I would have wished recalled if it had been said to any one but you. I promised to let you know all about it some day, but I've thought over the matter and I'm going to tell you now."

"No, no! I do not wish to hear."

"It is not fair to you that you should be exposed to an unknown scath. This did not occur to me when I set out, but your journey may be jeopardized because of my being deeper in dangerous projects than you have any suspicion of. So I have need to tell you my real errand in the south."

"Mr. Armstrong, I refuse to hear you. I will not be burdened with what does not concern me. I asked you to think of the injustice of what you were about to do. If you are on some secret mission, there are others besides yourself involved. It is most unfair to them that you should make a confidant of any person without their consent."

"You say sooth. If you take my hint and promptly disown me should I become involved, I am satisfied."

"I can the more readily disown you if I know nothing of the traffic you are engaged in."

The two were startled by a deep voice that broke in upon their discourse. They had heard no one approach, but now there stood before them at the outlet of the recess a tall, gaunt figure in the somber garb of the parliamentarian, as if he were the spirit of some forgotten Templar of whom they had just been speaking—indeed, he seemed the modern embodiment of one of that fanatic, sinister band, for, while his bearing betokened the fervid exhorter, a sword by his side indicated that he used the physical as well as the spiritual arm. His cheeks were sunken, and a two days' stubble on his chin emphasized not only the emaciation of his face, but the unhealthy clay color of his skin.

"A word with you. Who are you? Whence come you? Whether are you bound, and to what purpose?"

"Egad," muttered Armstrong under his breath, "here's a father confessor indeed, and right willing to take on the task with no misgiving."

The girl wondered how long the apparition had been standing there and rapidly ran over in her mind what had been said between herself and her companion since he came. Armstrong spoke up and, while speaking, proffered his pass to the interloper.

"Sir, that document will possibly satisfy all your questionings." The stranger, taking it, held it near the lamp and read its brief wording.

"This answers none of my questions except, and then by inference only, that you are perchance destined for Oxford."

"Is not the signature sufficient passport, so long as you do not find us south of Oxford or north of Carlisle? We are within the region over which the passport extends."

"For the second time I propound my inquiries."

"Then for the first time I return them to you. Who are you? Whence come you? Whether are you bound, and to what purpose?"

The man answered without the slightest show of resentment against what he must have known to be an intended impertinence.

"I am Hezekiah Benton, a humble preacher of the word, and, if need be, a wielder of the sword. I come from Newark and purpose returning thither, God willing, with more knowledge concerning you than you gave when you passed the gate. If you are entitled to hold this pass, you will meet no obstruction within its limits. As no persons are named upon this paper, it is my duty to satisfy my superiors that it is not misused."

"Pardon me, Mr. Benton, but has it not occurred to your superiors that if General Cromwell had wished the names known he would have set them down as fully as his own?"

Hezekiah thoughtfully scratched his stubby chin and was evidently nonplussed by the view so calmly presented to him. After turning the problem in his mind for a few moments, he replied:

"Nevertheless you are traveling on the London road. This pass reads Carlisle to Oxford. Newark is not on the highway between these two towns."

"Admirably reasoned, Mr. Benton, and I envy those who have opportunity of hearing your discourses. They listen to good logic, I stand warrant. But the apparent mystery is soon dissolved. This paper was written by his excellency at Corbith Manor, in the county of Durham, at about this hour of the night three days ago, what time, if I may so put it, I was the guest of his excellency at that place. If you will bear the county of Durham instead of the county of Northumberland in mind, you will observe I have taken the quickest route to Oxford, when the state of cross country roads is considered. So far as the London direction is concerned, we deflect from it tomorrow at Stamford and will rest, God permitting us, at Northampton tomorrow night."

"Sir, your disquisition is most complete and satisfactory. If but a tithe of it had been given at Newark I would have been saved a hurried journey and you a cross examination. I give you good night, and God be with you."

Frances rose also when their visitor had taken himself off.

"You are something of a diplomatist, Mr. Armstrong, but I fear diplomacy requires a touch of hypocrisy. Your account of another man's pass did not seem strictly accurate."

"It was true nevertheless. Every word I said was true. I never even hinted the pass belonged to me."

"The girl laughed and held out her hand."

"Yet you cannot deny that he gathered a wrong impression."

"Ah, that was his fault, not mine. But I will be honest with you and admit at once that had a direct falsehood been necessary I would have used it. I was determined not to give him any name, for the pass I hold from Cromwell set Manchester as the limit, and we are now south of Manchester. I would have given Benton my name at York, but not at Grantham."

CHAPTER XIX.

NEXT day the three were not as early beginning their march, because Northampton was barely fifty miles distant and the day was longer than the way. The good landlady of the Angel, bustling and voluble, saw them off with many blessings and wishes that God would speed them. Stamford furnished bait for their horses and a short rest for themselves. Then they took the deflecting road for Northampton, but their pack horse limped and their progress was slow. Frances was in better spirits than was the case since the pilgrimage began, for she had now persuaded her mind, which eagerly wished to be convinced, that her future action would save the lives of two men—Armstrong's not less than her brother's—and so she had come to look upon her unsuspecting companion as her beneficiary rather than her victim.

The day passed pleasantly enough, even if progress was slow. Armstrong related many interesting or amusing anecdotes of the border, and the girl came to the conclusion that life must be anything but dull in that hilly district. They partook of their noontide meal at a hospitable farmhouse, for inns were few and mostly untenanted. They learned that it would probably be dark by the time they reached Northampton, but there was a new moon to light their way. They were off the main line of travel and had the road practically to themselves. At about 5 in the afternoon they heard the tramping of a squadron behind them, coming on at a rapid walk. Armstrong suggested that it would be well to draw into the hedge while the troopers passed, and this they did. The Scot sat easily on his horse, watching the somewhat imposing oncoming, the breastplates of the men scintillating in the declining sun, which shone full upon them. Suddenly Armstrong straightened and, unconsciously perhaps, his hand grasped that of the girl beside him.

"Have you ever seen Cromwell?" he asked.

"No."

"That is he at the head of the cavalry."

She drew away her hand and sat there, scarcely breathing, fearful of the approaching encounter, which now could not be avoided. If Armstrong were equally perturbed he showed no sign of it, and she admired his nonchalance as she glanced momentarily at him. But her eyes turned instinctively again to the leader of the troops. There was something masterful in his very bulk; he seemed a massive man on his huge horse; power personified were horse and man. His unblinking eye faced the sun like an eagle's, and he came stolidly past them, looking neither to the right nor the left. The firm face was as inscrutable and as ruthless as that of the sphinx.

"Do you think he saw us?" she said after the soldiers had passed.

"Saw us?" echoed Armstrong. "Yes, every thread of our garments. What a man! God of war, how I should like to fight him!"

"I thought you admired him."

"So I do, more than any other on earth. If I had seen him before I doubt if I had been here."

"I understood you to say you met him at Corbith."

"Met him, yes, by dim candlelight, smooth and courteous. But I never really saw him until now. You cannot rightly judge a man—a fighter, that is—until you have looked at him on horseback. That man knows my business."

"I HAVE BROUGHT THE WOMAN, GENERAL."

ness. For the first time since I set out I doubt my success."

"Will you turn back?" she asked, her voice quivering.

"Oh, no! I'm his Roland. If we do not cross swords, we'll run a race, and may the best man win. But I feel strangely uncomfortable about the neck."

He raised his chin and moved his head from side to side, as if the rope already throttled him. Then he laughed, and she gazed at him in fascinated terror.

"That man is likely to defeat me," he continued. "His plans are all laid, and already I feel the coils tightening around me. I am satisfied he knows every move I have made since I left him. The unseen spy is on my track, and, by my sword, I'd rather circumvent him than rule the kingdom. Well, what's yer wits? Now's the time ye need them, my lad. In the first place, I dare not go through Northampton. That's clear."

"In my soul I'm certain a crisis awaits me there. I'll be nabbed in Northampton. Then the question, 'Why did you refuse a pass to Oxford?'"

"Did he offer you one?"

"Yes. The next question will be, 'Why are you south of the limit set by yourself, traveling to Oxford on another's pass?' To that query there's no answer. I'm a self convicted spy, and then the scaffold, according to all the rules of war."

"Pardon me if I do not follow your argument. If he has tracked you, as you think, there is no more reason he should stop you at Northampton than at Newark or Grantham. Aside from that, why did he not hold you when he had you?"

"Oh, I had not put my neck into the noose then. As for arresting me at Newark or at Grantham, I see now that such was his intention, but my friend Hezekiah failed him. It was undoubtedly Cromwell's purpose that we should have gone back with Benton."

"Still, I do not believe you. If Cromwell is as crafty as you seem to believe, it is likely he wishes you to reach Oxford. Unless that was the case, why should he have offered you the pass?"

"My lass, there are several sides to this problem, and what you say has the stamp of probability on it. Nevertheless I'll overset his arrangements. I am the only one of us three who cannot give good excuses for being in these parts. Here is the pass which protects you and old John," he said, giving her the document. "You and he will go to Oxford at your leisure. I shall gallop across country, will evade the parliamentary lines as best I may and will be in Oxford tomorrow morning. That will throw Old Noll a day out of his count."

"Then you leave me to meet Cromwell alone?"

"You have no need to fear the meeting. Your plea is perfect. Your brother was wounded, and you have undertaken his task. Of me or my plans you know nothing, and I was with you merely because I happened to be traveling this way and had brought your wounded brother to his home. And here is a great warning to us all. Happy is the person who can abide by his truth, who has no secret designs to conceal. My lady, I envy you."

Frances made no reply, but sat there, bending her eyes on the ground. There could be no doubt that his new resolve was the best move in the circumstances, and she was not in a position to inform him that his night march was unnecessary and that he would be wise to husband his horse's power until he left Oxford, for then would come his time of need.

"Well, let us get on," he cried. "I'll take the first byroad south."

Cautious old John, with his limping horse, had gone forward while they stood talking together, and now they cantered to overtake him. Frances was glad of the cessation of conversation that she might have opportunity of meditating on some argument that would retain him by her side. If he left her, she was resolved to seek out Cromwell at Northampton, tell him of her brother's distress and explain her own effort to make good his absence.

"General Cromwell's commands were that you should be brought to him as soon as you arrived."

He knocked at a door, and a gruff voice from within told him to enter. He opened the door and went in, followed by his prisoner.

"I have brought the woman, general. The man is under guard below." Saying this and receiving no reply, the officer laid the pass on the table and withdrew, closing the door behind him. Cromwell stood at the window, looking down on the dark street below, dotted with moving lights. His broad back was toward his visitor, and he did not turn round even when he addressed her. On a chair rested his polished breastplate and steel cap; otherwise he was unaccompanied as he had been when she saw him on the road. His voice was hoarse.

"Who are you, wench, and what are you to this man that you range the land brazenly together under a pass written for neither of you?"

With some difficulty the girl found her voice after two or three ineffectual attempts to speak and said:

"I am Frances Wentworth, sister to Lieutenant Wentworth of General Cromwell's army."

"The general's ponderous head turned slowly, and he bent his sullen eyes upon her. She wondered Armstrong had not seen the brutal power of that countenance even by candlelight.

"Why is your brother not in your place?"

"My brother was sorely wounded the morning he set out and now lies between life and death in our home."

"How came he wounded?"

"He met Lord Ruddy, who attacked him. My brother would not defend himself, and so was thrust through the body. Armstrong brought him to our house, and the doctor says he cannot be moved for a month at least."

"Why was I not informed of this?"

"I did not know where to find you."

"You, wench, surely did not know where to find me, but your brother knew that a message to his nearest superior would find me."

"My brother, I have told you, was dangerously wounded and had but one thing in his mind—to have done with the task you had set upon him."

"He committed it to your hands then?"

"He did."

"What was the task I set him?"

"It was to steal from Armstrong the king's commission and to deliver the result of that theft to General Cromwell, the receiver."

"Wench, your tongue is oversharpened. I pray you amend it."

"Not until I have told you I am no wench, but a lady."

"We have had too much of lady's meddling in England and will have less of it in days to come. A wench, if she be honest, is better than a lady, who is seldom honest. Your meddling in this matter has come near to causing a serious disarrangement of great affairs. How was I to know who you were or why you traveled? Has that foolish head of yours so little understanding that, though you stopped at York, at Newark, at Grantham, you gave no officer of mine a clue to your vagabondage?"

"A woman can fulfill her duty without so much babbling of it. My foolish head never thought a great general wished his designs published from one end of England to the other."

"If your brother had your brain without your tongue he would advance faster than he does."

"Am I, then, to go on with this adventure?"

"Yes. You will reach Oxford tomorrow. The king will delay and shuffle and suspect until our Scot is in a fine fume of impatience. For three days more I shall be in Northampton. After that for a week I shall be at Broughton castle, some few miles west of Banbury. If you should be delayed longer in Oxford, I shall let you know where I am by means of De Courcy, who—"

"De Courcy?" exclaimed the girl.

"Yes; what do you know of him?"

"If he is the same man who was in the entourage of the king in London—a Frenchman of that name—I know nothing good of him."

"You cannot look for every virtue in the character of a spy, and we who are doing the Lord's work must use the tools the Lord places in our hands."

"The Lord has naught to do with De Courcy. He is a devil's man, body and soul."

Cromwell scowled at her. "What mean you by that, hussy?" he asked shortly.

"I mean that De Courcy would sell you as readily as he would the king, if there was gold to be made of the bargaining. The Philistines come with money in their hands, and they always find a De Courcy, male or female."

"De Courcy toils for gold, and let him that is without sin cast the first stone. I give the wage demanded and care nothing so that God's work be done. God's work is the one thing important, so scorn not De Courcy or any other, but seek his aid in Oxford if it be necessary to communicate with me."

"That shall I never do," muttered the girl under her breath, and if Cromwell heard he paid no heed.

"Have you given thought to your purpose?" he asked.

"I have thought of nothing else; it has never been absent from my mind."

"How do you hope to accomplish possession?"

"I expect to enact the Scriptural part of the thief in the night, somewhere between Oxford and Carlisle."

"Between Oxford and Carlisle is vague. I cannot trust to a scheme so lacking in definiteness. I shall have Armstrong laid by the heels long before he reaches Carlisle. If the wench's hand fail, then comes the rough paw of the trooper immediately after. Your chance will be in Banbury, where you must contrive to have him stop for the night."

"If we leave Oxford early in the morning he will not be content to stop in Banbury, which is less than twenty-five miles away, and even on the coming rather we have covered more than double that distance each day. He will be urgent on his return."

"True, but there lies your task in management. You may fail ill, and I question if he will leave you. I can order your pass taken from you at Banbury, and a night's delay caused. You will go to the inn called the Banbury Arms, at the sign of the blazoned sun. The innkeeper will ask for your pass, and when he sees it he will place you in adjoining rooms which are fitted for your purpose. There is a communicating door, bolting on your side, invisible, except by close scrutiny, on the other. What follows will depend on your skill and quietness. Has the man any suspicion of your intention toward him?"

"None in the least. He is honest and kind."

"Ah! Do not dwell too much on his kindness. Make it your business to know where he keeps the king's letter, and when it is once in your possession speed at once to Broughton castle and deliver it into my hands. I will exchange for it full pardon and a captain's commission for your brother, and if you have further to ask my ear will be inclined."

"I shall have nothing to ask except that this Scot be allowed to pass unscathed to his home."

Cromwell gazed intently at her for a moment, and she returned his look clear eyed and unblinded. He replied slowly:

"If I were willing to harm the Scot the case would be much simpler than it is. You left your home thinking only of your brother, but now the stranger occupies at least a part of your mind."

"It is natural we should feel compassion for those we injure."

"You will bring me this document?"

"I swear I will."

"Nay, nay, swear not at all. If a man's word bear him not up, he will sink when his oath alone buoys him. Wench, I will trust you, but remember this—if I am compelled to take this man through force of arms, to surround him with a troop and publicly wrench his burden from him, I must as publicly hang him, to warn the next Scot who would make the essay on Oxford. If you succeed, you save not only your brother's life, but this man's as well. Now go!"

Frances retreated and let herself out of the room. On the stair head at the end of the passage, well out of possible earshot, two soldiers stood on guard, and between them an elderly woman, who immediately advanced when she saw the girl leave the general's room.

"I am the landlady," she said. "Will you come with me?"

"I wish a word with my friend," replied Frances. The woman appeared nonplussed and stood hesitating, but at that moment the officer who had conducted her came up the stair and approached. "I wish to speak with Mr. Armstrong," she said to him. "Where is he?"

"One moment, madam, if you please," replied the officer, knocking at the general's door. He was not bade to enter, but the single word, "Oxford," uttered in a deep voice, came from within. The subordinate appeared to understand and with a bow to the lady said:

"Mr. Armstrong is waiting below. Will you come down, or shall I ask him to come up?"

"You may tell him I wish to see him."

She walked to the head of the stair and saw Armstrong alone in the lower hall, pacing up and down with a fine swagger of Scottish indifference, which he must have been far from feeling, while the doorway was blocked by two guards holding grounded pikes. The moment the young man saw her he came bounding up the stair two at a time. All the guards, above and below, seemed struck with simultaneous alertness and made a motion which, if continued, would have brought their weapons to bear on the prisoner, but a slight signal from the officer's hand brought back their former stolidity.

"Oh, Mr. Armstrong, I merely wished to know at what hour we set out tomorrow."

"Do we set out tomorrow?" he asked in a whisper.

"Yes, there is no obstacle between here and Oxford. I was up so late last night, and that, with this long, dragging journey today, has tired me. All I wished to know was the hour for tomorrow."

"But you will have supper with me?"

"No. I can eat nothing. I am too tired."

"Now, that's strange. I'm as hungry as the Tweed at flood time. Let me persuade you."

"Thank you, but I would rest. Good night."

MAIL CLERKS

Have Trouble in Getting Letters to Right Partners at Times But They Usually Succeed.

Uncle Sam and Johnnie Bull each has a way of his own of doing things. This fact is well illustrated by the following incidents:

Some years ago the writer found himself in a waiting room in Philadelphia in conversation with Dr. W. H. Tolman, director of the American Institute of Social Science. During the conversation Dr. Tolman expressed his admiration for the efficiency of the United States mail service. "You can put most anything on a letter in America," he said, "and somehow it will find its destination all right. But John Bull must have everything down in black and white, and that just about so, or he won't perform."

"Recently," he continued, "I mailed a letter to that well known Englishman, William T. Stead. Not knowing his street and number I put on the letter 'Editor of the Review of Reviews,' never dreaming that the note would fail of delivery. But bless you, the other day back it came, much to my disgust. I remailed the letter, suggesting that Mr. Stead's precise address could be found by reference to the London directory. Uncle Sam would have pulled his whiskers a long time before returning a letter so addressed."

"And so he would. I dropped a letter in the Newark postoffice last week intended for Washington, D. C. A reply was received today to which was added the following postscript: 'Your last letter, by the way, was very inadequately addressed—just had my name and 412, 11th N. E. on it. No Washington and no D. C. But the letter came to land without delay, and with no pencil marks of any kind on it. For the fun of the thing I showed the letter to the superintendent of mails here. He was much pleased that the letter should have been delivered, and asked if he might keep the envelope. You might tell this to your postmaster. Better put on the rest of the address next time, however.'

Mr. C. H. Durant, advance man for Mr. Evans, left Wednesday for Marion in the interest of the company.

Mr. Evans has secured some of the best talent obtainable and will no doubt make a success. Among the members of the company are Brandon Evans, better known as Tom Evans, Victor Chillard, George W. ARE IN FINE TRIM FOR THEIR COMING BOUT.

Corbett and O'Brien Meet Sept. 7—Leander, the American Cyclist, Killed at Paris.

San Francisco, Aug. 24.—Munroe has made his last public appearance until he faces Jeffries next Friday night. He had the gloves on for several fast rounds, and was put through a course of signal work by McCoy. This was followed by limbering up on the road. Munroe will hereafter be schooled in private by McCoy. Jeffries inclined toward the anti-breakfast cult, eating only a sherry and egg. After a short sprint on the road he put in some time in the gymnasium boxing and wrestling, concluding the day with a run on the road. He will work up to the day of the fight.

Corbett-O'Brien Bout.

New York, Aug. 24.—Jim Corbett and Jack O'Brien accepted the offer of the Tuxedo Athletic club of Philadelphia for their six-round boxing bout on the night of Sept. 7. The club offered 75 per cent of the gross receipts to the boxers.

There were three cyclists in the race. At the time of the accident Leander was traveling at a pace of 57 miles an hour and was more than a lap ahead when he was thrown over the handlebars of his machine and fell on his head. He was removed unconscious to a hospital and did not regain consciousness up to the time of his death.

Gentlemen:—I have been afflicted with rheumatism all my life until a few months ago, when a friend recommended LIFE PLANT, and after taking three bottles of it, I was relieved. I cheerfully recommend it to any one who is afflicted with rheumatism. Yours truly,
F. SHEPHERD,
No. 155 Burton St.

Mrs. Ed. Jones, of Logansport, Ind., writes under date of Aug. 23, 1903:

Dear Sirs:—I have just purchased a second bottle of your medicine (LIFE PLANT) and I take pleasure in stating that the previous bottle bought did me a great deal of good. I have been doctoring with four different doctors, and this one bottle of LIFE PLANT did me more good than the four doctors did and at a great deal less cost.
MRS. ED. JONES,
